IMMIGRATION TO THE USA – A DREAM FOR MANY

Oscar Handlin(1915-2011) an eminent American historian and a pioneer in Immigration to American history, quotes in his Pulitzer winning book, The Uprooted (1951) with the beginning lines "Once I thought to write a history of the immigrants in America. Then I discovered that the immigrants were American history."

Immigration to the USA is a cherished aspiration to many across the globe. American Community Survey (ACS) data shows numbers at 44.5 million immigrants residing in the USA in the year 2017. This can vary from people touring to the US, students looking for opportunities to study, ambitions to work in the US, obtain legal permanent resident status also familiarly recognized as "green card" and for many, eventually to settle there, after going through the naturalization of the citizenship process.

Immigration is the term we say in general, however, when accurately used we mention as immigrants and non-immigrants. Immigrants are the people entitled/already have the permanent immigration status to get a green card and the naturalization thereafter. It includes immediate relatives, family/company-sponsored preferences and special immigrants and Diversity Immigrants Lottery. Non-immigrants refer to temporary visitors like tourists, students, job candidates staying for a specified period. Total visas issued were 533,557 for immigrants and 9,028,026 for nonimmigrants in 2018, stated by the US Department of State. The numbers in 2017 are 1.13 million for legal permanent resident status and 707,265 for persons naturalized in the US by the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services.

Seeing the numbers we naturally pique to think we do have our opportunity too. The phrase, "This is all easier said than done", is applicable precisely for the whole immigration process scenario for the USA.

Prospective people have to go through patiently a long process of checklists before your visas get stamped and approved so that you can officially travel to the US for whatever time duration you intended for in the first place or forever. Here instead of just mentioning as people why it is, we mentioned as prospective people? That is because people have high chances of getting rejected for entry into the US than your chances for rejections on love, university, job or even a transplant!
